This paper takes a step to fill this gap by analyzing the Korean experience with these measures. We find that loan-to-value and debt-to-income limits are associated with a decline in house price appreciation and transaction activity. Furthermore, the limits alter expectations, which play a key role in bubble dynamics.

Yet, we know very little about the impact of actively-imposed maximum limits on loan-to-value and debt-to-income ratios. This paper takes a step to fill this gap by analyzing the Korean experience with these tools. Using regional data from 2002 to 2010 and survey information on households from 2001 to 2009, we find that such limits are associated with a decline in house price appreciation.
